Media Highlights

FBI Director Mueller Visit Dominates News: Biometrics Top Issue
All papers extensively cover FBI Director's visit to Ankara yesterday, with many using key messages from a US Embassy press release in reports. Mainstream Sabah headline reads "FBI Director: Six Hours, Three Important Meetings" and reports that Mueller met with Deputy PM Cicek, Justice Minister Ergin and Security Department Director Koksall to discuss the PKK elements in Northern Iraq, the situation in Makhmur refugee camp and next steps in the process after the Treasury Department's sanctions against the three "drug kingpin" PKK leaders. Sabah notes that Deputy PM Cicek said that "Mueller reiterated support for cooperation between Turkey and the US in the fight against terror, but we did not discuss Makhmur and nuclear issues." Mainstream Aksam headline reads "Either Try Them or Return to Us" and claims Cicek asked Mueller for closer cooperation in the extradition of PKK terrorists to Turkey. In an interview with Aksam, Cicek said he emphasized that all three of the accused PKK drug smugglers were hiding in Northern Iraq, in an area under the control of the US. Cicek added that they also discussed Turkey's preparation of new terror regulations, the establishment of a public order under secretariat and the draft law concerning the protection of personal information that is now in parliament. Aksam also notes that the US Embassy remained silent before the visit, but yesterday released a statement announcing that the visit focused on the fight against terror. Liberal Radikal headline on the front page reads "A Shocking Demand from the US" and, based on information provided by "high level sources," reports that Mueller asked Turkey to collect the biometrical data of all people using Turkish airports and harbors and to share this information with the US to better monitor terrorists travelling through Turkey. Radikal reports that the demand was rejected outright by the Turkish side because both Turkish and EU harmonization laws do not permit compiling of this kind of information. Most papers referred to the US Embassy press release in saying that the FBI Director came to Turkey to discuss ongoing and important cooperation on counter terrorism and law-enforcement matters. Meanwhile, leftist-nationalist Cumhuriyet rebuffed these US assertions for the visit, noting that the "main issue" was the security of US troops withdrawing from Iraq.

Energy Minister On Cancelled Nuclear Tender; Notes Parris Visit

HaberTurk TV and online website report extensively on remarks by Energy Minister Yildiz at a press conference before an Energy Summit in Ankara. Most of the article is about how Yildiz is expecting the final TETAS decision regarding the cancellation of the nuclear power plant tender before next week's Bayram holiday. HaberTurk also notes that Energy Minister Yildiz confirmed that President Obama's "Special Energy Envoy" Mark Parris arrived yesterday and that they discussed regional issues. Regarding a question on Iran uranium, Minister Yildiz said "We did not say the uranium must be kept in Turkey. If Iran and the UN put a demand in this regard we are going to evaluate it. Our approach on this issue is positive because Turkey has technical capacity."

Iran Rejects Nuclear Deal. Continued coverage in today's newspapers on Iran's rejection of the IAEA nuclear proposal to store LEU in Turkey. Mainstream Sabah headline reads "Iran Doesn't Make Any Effort," saying "Iran blocked the way to the UN's nuclear proposal."

In "A Clear NO from Iran," leftist-nationalist Cumhuriyet emphasizes the "UN has offered the proposal to overcome the crisis over Iran's nuclear program and Turkey was one of the potential candidates for storing Iranian uranium." Islamist-oriented Zaman carries the headline, "Iran Rejects Demand for Storing Uranium Abroad," and opines "Iran's decision will raise tensions between the sides." In "I Won't Send Uranium," liberal Radikal highlights international reaction saying "France is disappointed with Iran's decision while US indicated that Iran has little time left for a positive reply."

US Model for Presidential Election

ANKARA 00001665 002 OF 003

Intellectual/Islamist oriented Zaman and mainstream Hurriyet report that the Council of Ministers adopted a bill that sets up the infrastructure for presidential elections by popular vote for the first time in 2012. Based on the US election model, candidates must have transparent election bank accounts and all income and expenditures during campaigns must be registered in these accounts. No financial assistance will be given from the Treasury. Zaman notes that the 26-article bill is expected to go to parliament soon.

Pundits' Focus: Iraq; Turkish Foreign Policy Direction and Turkey-Armenia Normalization

Prominent Turkish pundits today address a variety of issues mostly through philosophical arguments. In mainstream Hurriyet, Cuneyt Ulsever comments on the growing Turkey, Iraq and the US cooperation, which he believes makes for "the essence of Kurdish initiative." He calls on the government to explain to the public what exactly Turkey has promised to contribute in Northern Iraq/PKK and in the US troop withdrawal process. Semih Idiz of mainstream Milliyet is interested in the aftermath of Iraq war which he believes "despite strongly negative expectations, Turkey has started enjoying economic benefits by increasing trade and cooperation with Iraq."

Milliyet's Kadri Gursel has an objection regarding the Turkey-EU process. He argues that Turkey's engagement in the Alliance of Civilization "is working against Turkey's integration with the EU." His advice is that Turkey stops acting as speaker for the Islamic world, and "focus merely on full democracy and rule of law" instead.

Regarding Turkey-Armenia normalization, panelist Hasan Cemal notes that signing protocol is only a beginning and should be fulfilled by a campaign "to win hearts and minds." Attending a Harvard University panel discussion, Cemal is suggesting that "a liberal debate on genocide and facing up to history" is needed urgently.

GMO Debate: "US Firm Bribed the Agriculture Ministry" (HaberTurk) Mainstream HaberTurk reports that the US authorities identified a bribery case by an American firm while doing business with Turkey in order to promote GMO-engineered cotton seeds. The report claims: "American Capital Board (SEC) examined the documents related to Delta & Pine Land (DPL) company's efforts during the 2001-2007 period in Turkey. SEC concluded that DPL gave bribes to Turkish agriculture ministry officials while selling genetically modified cotton seeds." The bribery case was also admitted by Monsanto, which took over DPL in 2007 and committed the company to pay 300,000 USD fine to the SEC, the story adds. HaberTurk also tells its readers that the amount of the bribe has not been clearly identified, however there was credible evidence regarding DPL's gratuities to Turkish authorities such as paid travel, refrigerators, computers and office furniture. Talking with the then Director General at the Turkish Ministry of Agriculture, HaberTurk quoted the former manager as saying "Let's not forget that we live in Turkey. All companies distribute presents to authorities."
